

We invite you to join us for The Cost of Poverty Experience

One in five children in America live at or below the poverty line.

These numbers should disturb us, yet statistics can have a numbing effect. The Cost of Poverty Experience (COPE) offers an opportunity to walk in the shoes of families in our community who face poverty every day.

Through the sponsorship of the CareSource Foundation, Think Tank developed COPE with individuals who have lived experience in poverty. Their stories give participants an opportunity to move beyond assumptions or stereotypes to a more holistic understanding of the causes and effects of poverty. Also captured in the experience is the role that our communities play through interactions with under resourced families.

Many groups across the nation use COPE to work more effectively with under resourced families. The experiential nature of COPE helps organizations and communities more deeply understand the complexities of poverty, paving the way to address the issues more comprehensively.
